

Third-Hand Smoke

Third-hand smoke refers to the toxic chemicals in smoke that remain trapped in such things as hair, skin, carpet, furniture and toys long after a cigarette has been extinguished.

These toxic chemicals pollute the air and get into people's lungs and bodies.

The production and disposal of cigarettes and tobacco products have detrimental effects on the environment. Cigarette butts are the most littered item worldwide. They are not biodegradable and can take decades to decompose.